COURSE DESCRIPTIONS*

WGS271Y1: Gender in Popular Culture
A critical examination of institutions, representations and practices associated with contemporary popular, mass-produced, local and alternative culture. Students will develop skills in media literacy in relation to representations of race, class and gender in a variety of popular cultural forms.

WGS334H1: The Politics/Cultures of Surveillance
 Exclusion: WGS280H1S, Winter 2017.
Through a careful consideration and centering of race, gender and sexuality, this course examines the often understudied modes of thought and forms of knowledge that surveillance practices and technologies produce. How are race and gender structured through modes of surveillance? How can we problematize the “facts” and seemingly mundane forms of data that neutral algorithms and surveillance technologies produce? Who has the “right” to privacy, and who does privacy benefit? What does it mean to live in a surveillance society? From exploring geopolitics and technoscience, to selfies, prisons, airports and regimes of biosecurity, this course will grapple with these foundational questions. Beyond surveying how contemporary cultural and political life is defined through surveillance practices and technologies, this course emphasizes tracing a genealogy of surveillance within critical transnational feminist frameworks. To do so, we will engage a range of interdisciplinary scholarship in the fields of Black studies, feminist studies, queer studies, and citizenship studies. Overall, this course will interrogate how surveillance practices have long enacted racialized, gendered, capitalist, and imperialist forms of violence, and imagine collective responses to these practices in modern surveillance societies.

WGS355H1: Gendered Labour Around the World
This course will focus on masculinities and femininities in workplace settings, with an emphasis on service work around the world. We will discuss workers’ lived experiences of gender regimes which are embedded within the dynamics of class, race and nation. The relationships between gender processes and workplace hierarchies will be explored.

WGS373H1: Gender and Violence
An interdisciplinary study of gendered violence in both historical and contemporary contexts including topics such as textual and visual representations; legal and theoretical analyses; structured violence; war and militarization; sexual violence; and, resistance and community mobilization.

WGS397H1: The Politics of Girlhood
This course communicates with the growing-field of ‘girl studies’ and provides a critical exploration of the historical, social, psychological and political definitions attached to ‘girlhood’. We will move towards a feminist understanding of how definitions of the ‘girl-child’ shape individual experience, historical narratives, cultural representations, political agendas and futures.
